

When someone speaks a foreign language it is apparent that there may be problems with communication which healthcare professionals take time and effort to explore. When speaking to a local we forget that their literacy skills may be poor. Even more important numeracy skills are very poor in a significant number of people. It is important that problems are identified. Clinic attendance may become a problem and apparent non-compliance/concordance may become an issue otherwise.